2. Consider and take action regarding the zoning re-write.

Kornmann presented an updated draft versions of the land use and bulk dimension tables along with current progress of the zoning rewrite project. Kornmann asked for feedback and also direction regarding design standards for downtown, industrial, and residential areas.

The Plan Commission discussed design standards for downtown, highlighting a couple of communities as examples. Bennett highlighted Ripon. Kornmann highlighted the recommended design guidelines for the City's facade grant program that was largely borrowed from Ripon. The Commission would like to emphasize flexibility and affordability using alternative materials that can serve the function of making facades look nice. Albright brought to attention the lack of speed for downtown building development and cited Baraboo as an example. Kornmann highlighted the Plan Commission's role in creating design guideline. The discussion centered on balancing design requirements versus being an impediment to development.

The Plan Commission discussed design guideline for industrial areas. Kornmann identified several different industrial districts that could utilize different design guidelines. Hajewski would like to see some proposed design guidelines. Kornmann also highlighted a few properties subject to design covenants. Design guidelines could make sense for undeveloped lots in commercial areas. Monday asked about overlays, but Kornmann informed the Plan Commission about the goal of reducing or eliminating overlays for a simpler mixed-use concept. This concept could be used in residential areas too.

Hajewski cited an example for design guidelines in a residential area and how to balance height and setback regulation. There was some additional discussion on how accessory dwelling units would be implemented.

Staff will look into detail analysis, flexible design guideline options, narrowing down proposed districts and figure out setback options. The Plan Commission will go through the tables and test them.
